How to Ensure Your Side Hustle Pays Off in Canada

Research the Market

Do detailed market research to not only find out how much demand there is for your product or service, but also how much competition there is. Is there a specific niche you can target, a particular problem you can solve, or a unique selling point that will help you stand out from the crowd?

Understand the Initial Investment Required

You can start some side hustles with $0 upfront, but others require you to invest in training or equipment. If you need to spend money to start making money, check whether the returns you can expect to receive will be worth it.

Set a Goal (and Make a Plan)

Set a goal for your side hustle, whether that means earning a certain amount extra each week or saving for a major purchase in the future. Crunch the numbers to work out how much side hustling you'll need to do to reach that goal.

Calculate Your Hourly Rate

Regularly compare your hours worked to the amount of profit you make — is the effective hourly rate you're earning worth it for the time and effort you need to put in?

Reassess Regularly

Profits can fluctuate and your earning potential can change. Reassess your side hustle returns regularly to decide whether the time and effort you're investing is still justified.

Check the Tax Implications

Earning extra income could potentially push you into a higher tax bracket. Make sure to keep the tax implications in mind when working out if a side hustle is worth it. The CRA requires you to report all income from all sources.

Frequently Asked Questions

What are the best side hustles in Canada?

The best side hustles in Canada depend on your skills and available time. For quick, easy money, GPT apps, surveys, and bank bonuses are excellent. For higher earning potential, freelancing, web design, and consulting offer the best returns. If you prefer offline work, dog walking, house cleaning, and furniture assembly provide steady income. The most successful side hustlers often combine multiple methods to maximize their earnings.

What are some remote side hustles in Canada?

Remote side hustles in Canada include freelance writing, virtual assistance, web design, social media management, online tutoring, transcription, bookkeeping, user testing, GPT apps, and selling digital products on Etsy. These can all be done from home with just a computer and internet connection. Remote side hustles offer flexibility to work around your full-time job.

How can I make an extra $100 in Canada?

You can make an extra $100 in Canada by combining several side hustles. For example, sign up for a bank account bonus ($100-$175), complete surveys for a few hours ($10-$20), sell unused items on Facebook Marketplace ($50-$100), and use cashback apps for your regular shopping ($5-$10). Alternatively, a single dog walking session ($20-$40), a few hours of food delivery ($40-$60), or one user testing session ($10-$100) can quickly add up.

Do I need to pay taxes on side hustle income in Canada?

Yes, the Canada Revenue Agency (CRA) requires you to report all income from all sources, including side hustles. If you earn more than a few hundred dollars, you should report it on your tax return. Keep detailed records of your earnings and expenses, as many side hustle costs (mileage, supplies, home office) may be deductible. Consult a tax professional if unsure.

Which side hustles require no upfront investment?

Many side hustles require no upfront investment, including GPT apps, surveys, user testing, dog walking (if you have comfortable shoes), selling unused items, bank account bonuses, and virtual assistance (if you have a computer). These are ideal for beginners who want to test side hustling without financial risk.

How do I balance a side hustle with a full-time job?

To balance a side hustle with full-time work, choose opportunities that fit your existing schedule. Use commute time for GPT apps, lunch breaks for bank sign-ups, weekday evenings for freelancing, and weekends for offline work. Set clear boundaries around your time, and don't sacrifice sleep or health for extra income. Start small and scale up as you adjust.
